A Wolfdog with a Heart of Gold

Queenie was born in 2009 to a wolf mother and a Siberian husky father. She inherited the striking appearance of a wolf, with her piercing blue eyes and thick, silver-gray fur. However, her gentle nature and unwavering loyalty made her more like a devoted companion than a wild predator.

Queenie's owner, Kim Wolfe, recognized her potential as a therapy dog early on. With her calm demeanor and empathetic nature, Queenie had a unique ability to comfort and uplift those in need. She became a certified therapy dog through the Alliance of Therapy Dogs and spent countless hours visiting hospitals, nursing homes, and schools.

A Comfort to Cancer Patients

Queenie's work as a therapy dog had a profound impact on many, but her most notable contribution was to cancer patients. Her gentle presence brought solace to those undergoing chemotherapy and radiation treatments. She would often lie beside patients, nuzzling their hands or simply offering a calming presence.

One of Queenie's most touching encounters was with a young girl named Sarah, who was battling leukemia. Sarah was often too weak to leave her bed, but Queenie's visits always brought a smile to her face. Queenie would curl up beside Sarah and rest her head on the girl's lap, providing comfort and companionship during the difficult days.

A Symbol of Hope and Inspiration

Queenie's story is not just a tale of one remarkable dog; it is a testament to the extraordinary bond that can exist between humans and animals. Her ability to bring joy and comfort to those in need is a reminder of the power of love and compassion.

Queenie's legacy will live on through the countless lives she touched. She has inspired countless others to adopt animals, especially those with special needs, and to recognize the incredible value of pet therapy. Her story is a reminder that even in the face of adversity, hope and love can prevail.
