

True Stories of Mail Order Brides on the Frontier

In the 19th century, the American West was a land of opportunity and adventure. For young women in the East, the prospect of a new life on the frontier was both exciting and daunting. Many women were drawn to the West by the promise of land, marriage, and a chance to start over.

Mail order brides were women who advertised for husbands in newspapers and magazines. They came from all walks of life, but they shared a common dream: to find a good husband and build a life together on the frontier.

The men who answered these ads were often farmers, ranchers, and miners. They were looking for wives who were willing to work hard and share their dreams. The women who responded to these ads were often just as determined and ambitious as the men they married.

The journey west was long and arduous. Women traveled by wagon train, stagecoach, and on foot. They faced many dangers along the way, including bad weather, disease, and Indian attacks. But they persevered, driven by the hope of a better life.

Once they reached their destination, mail order brides often found themselves in a very different world than the one they had left behind. They had to adjust to a new culture, a new climate, and a new way of life. But they were determined to make a success of their new lives.

Life on the frontier was hard, but it was also rewarding. Mail order brides worked alongside their husbands to build homes, raise families, and create a new community. They faced many challenges, but they also experienced great joy and satisfaction.

Mail order brides played a vital role in the settlement of the West. They were strong, courageous, and determined women who helped to create a new society. Their stories are a testament to the American spirit of adventure and perseverance.

Here are some true stories of mail order brides on the frontier:

- Elizabeth Wasson: Elizabeth Wasson was born in Pennsylvania in 1837. She was a schoolteacher when she answered an ad from a farmer in Oregon. She traveled to Oregon by wagon train and married her husband in 1859. They settled on a farm in the Willamette Valley and raised a family of 10 children. Elizabeth was a strong and independent woman who made a success of her life on the frontier.

- Sarah Jane Moore: Sarah Jane Moore was born in Missouri in 1845. She was a seamstress when she answered an ad from a farmer in Montana. She traveled to Montana by stagecoach and married her husband in 1865. They settled on a ranch in the Bitterroot Valley and raised a family of five children. Sarah Jane was a devoted wife and mother who helped her husband build a prosperous ranch.
- Martha Jane Canary: Martha Jane Canary, better known as Calamity Jane, was born in Missouri in 1852. She was a frontierswoman, scout, and sharpshooter. She married a soldier named Clinton Burke in 1872, but they divorced a few years later. Calamity Jane lived a wild and adventurous life on the frontier. She was a friend to the Sioux Indians and fought in the Indian Wars. She died in South Dakota in 1903.

These are just a few of the many stories of mail order brides on the frontier. These women were strong, courageous, and determined to make a success of their lives in the West. They played a vital role in the settlement of the West, and their stories continue to inspire people today.
