Mary Shelley's encounter with the supernatural occurred on a spring evening in 1814. While staying at Springhead, a manor house in Dorset, England, she claimed to have witnessed the apparition of a young girl. The girl, dressed in white, was said to have stared at Shelley with a haunting gaze before vanishing into thin air.

This encounter deeply affected Shelley, who later incorporated elements of the ghost story into her groundbreaking novel, "Frankenstein." The novel's central character, Victor Frankenstein, is haunted by the creature he has created, much like Shelley herself was haunted by the ghost of Springhead.

Percy Shelley: The Haunted Castle of Chillon

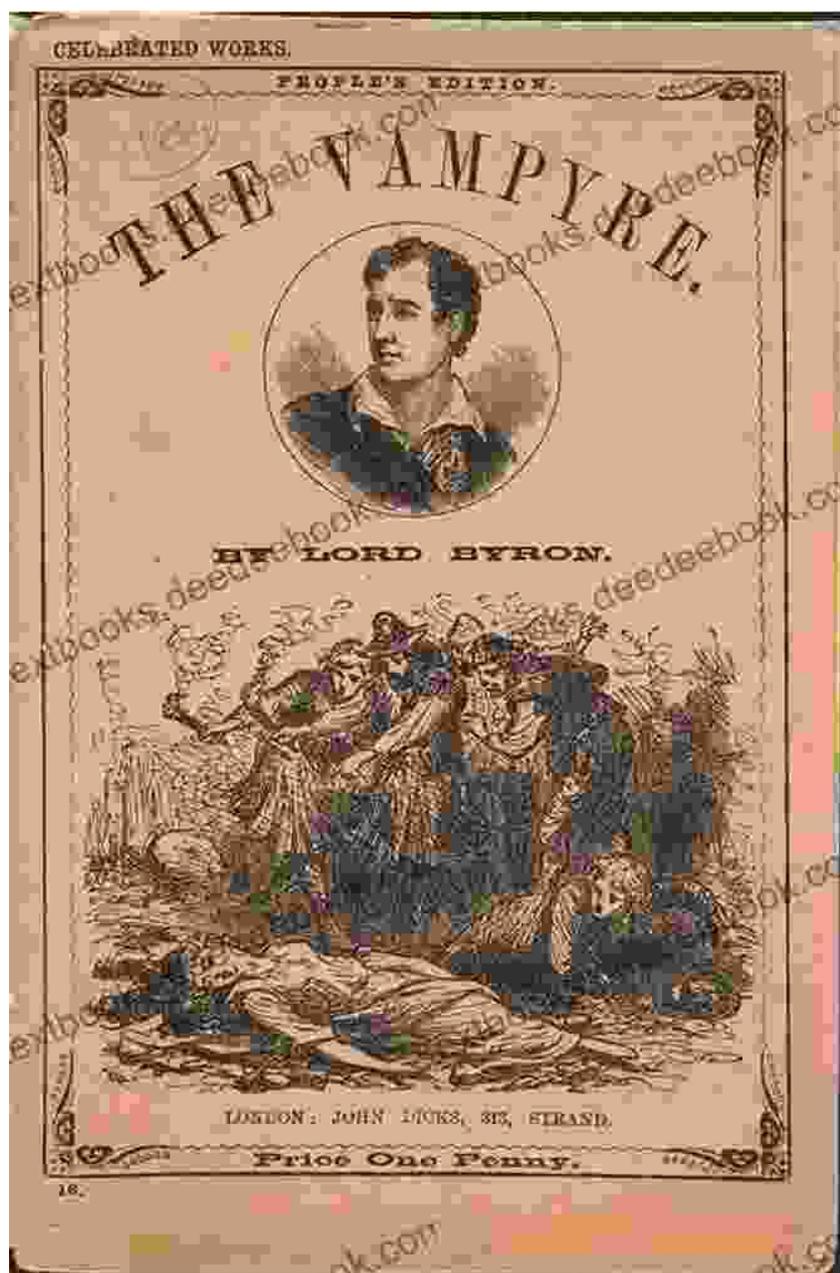

Chillon Castle, the setting of Lord Byron's poem "The Prisoner of Chillon" and a source of inspiration for Percy Shelley.

Percy Shelley's imagination was sparked by a visit to Chillon Castle in Switzerland in 1816. The castle's dark history, including tales of torture and imprisonment, left an indelible mark on his mind.

Shelley was particularly struck by the story of Bonivard, a Genevan monk who was held captive in the castle for six years. Bonivard's ghost is said to haunt the castle, and Shelley incorporated elements of his legend into his poem "The Revolt of Islam." The poem explores themes of tyranny and oppression, reflecting Shelley's own political beliefs.

Lord Byron: The Vampyre

Lord Byron's contribution to the Gothic genre was his seminal short story, "The Vampyre" (1819). This tale introduced the character of Lord Ruthven, a vampire who is both seductive and enigmatic.

Byron's vampyre differed from traditional folklore in that he was not portrayed as a monstrous creature but as a sophisticated, aristocratic figure. This portrayal had a profound influence on the development of the vampire myth in subsequent literature and film.

John Keats: La Belle Dame sans Merci

To Autumn

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness,
Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
Conspiring with him how to load and bless
With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eves hang;
To bend with apples the moss'd cottage-trees,
And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
And still more, later flowers for the bees,
Until they think warm days will never cease,
For Summer has o'er-brimm'd their clammy cells.

Who hath not seen thee oft amid thy store?
Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing wind;
Or on a half-reap'd furrow sound asleep,
Drows'd with the fume of poppies, while thy hook
Sparcs the next swath and all its twined flowers:
And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep
Steady thy laden head across a brook;
Or by a cyder-press, with patient look,
Thou watchest the last oozings hour by hour.

Where are the songs of Spring? Ay, where are they?
Think not of them, thou hast thy music too,—
While barred clouds bloom the soft-dying day,
And touch the stubble-plains with rosy hue;
Then in a wailful choir the small gnats mourn
Among the river sallows, borne aloft
Or sinking as the light wind lives or dies;
And full-grown lambs loud bleat from hilly bourn;
Hedge-crickets sing; and now with treble soft
The red-breast whistles from a garden-croft;
And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.
